Project84, Mark Jenkins’ moving installation against male suicide

Giulia Pacciardi · 5 years ago · Art

In the UK, every two hours, a man decides to take his own life, and statistics speak for themselves: 84 men every week.
This emergency gave rise to Project84, the latest project by Mark Jenkins in collaboration with CALM (Campaign Against Living Miserably), an association that deals with the suicide prevention.

Jenkins, known for his installations which aim to provoke reactions in a society that is too indifferent and distracted, has placed 84 faceless figures on the London Television Centre' roof, in the heart of London.
Faceless figures, standing just a step before nowhere.
Figures who had a face and, with it, a real story.

Each of the 84 sculptures created by Jenkins represents a man who, through the project site, is told through the words of his family.

The best astronomy photos of 2022

Tommaso Berra · 2 weeks ago · Photography

Space is mysterious and frightening territory, we observe from Earth phenomena that most of the time, unless you are an astronomer or very passionate, cannot be fully explained. Remaining are the fascination of seeing them from afar, observing celestial bodies, night skies and everything that inspires fantastic tales and makes us imagine the presence of other worlds light years away from us.
Some phenomena require patience because they are very slow, others are difficult to witness because they are extemporaneous, all of which makes photographing astronomical phenomena a very difficult task, and each year the best shots are awarded at the Astronomy Photographer of the Year.

3,000 photos entered in 2022 by photographers from 67 countries, including the winning one by photographer Gerald Rhemann, who managed to capture a rare event that made many look up to the sky last December. It was Christmas Day when comet Leonard crossed the sky over Tivoli, Namibia. Rhemann managed to capture the moment before the celestial body was blown away by the solar wind, and the energy-charged shot earned first place in the contest.
For the next 12 months the shot will be on display in London, at the National Maritime Museum, along with the other entries and divided into thematic categories (galaxies, sun, moon, landscapes…).

Martina Matencio, stories of fragility and beauty

Claudia Fuggetti · 3 weeks ago · Photography

Martina Matencio is a photographer who lives and works in Barcelona who became known through her highly successful Instagram account called lalovenenoso which has more than 223K followers. Since the age of sixteen, Martina has been interested in images becoming a very popular photographer also because of her passion for fashion that led her to create her clothing line, Luna de Marte.

In her images, the main subjects are beautiful, ethereal, fragile and sensual women who are always portrayed with a palette of predominantly desaturated tones that enhance the lighting of natural light.

A particular focus is that which the artist places on protagonists eyes, who are often enhanced by beams of light that highlight the colors and the faces expressiveness these slightly melancholy women have made their weakness their strength.

A Martina Matencio’s shot will be at Collater.al Photography 2022.
